It is time to set these matters for sentencing. Two trials in related cases have been concluded to verdict and three more are pending: Guillory, CR 14-607 PJH, set for April 10, 2017, Marr et al, CR 14-580 PJH, set for May 15, 2017, and Yeganeh, CR 15-339 PJH, set for August 21, 2017. Thus far only seven sentencing hearings have been scheduled for defendants who have entered guilty pleas. To assist the court and defendants in selecting reasonable dates, the government shall identify which of the above-captioned defendants will be called as witnesses at each of the three remaining trials and the court will schedule the sentencing hearings for those defendants who will not be called to testify first. Having presided over two of these trials, the court is aware that the government's witness list tends to be over-inclusive, however, in making the ordered disclosures, the government shall proceed in good faith and may not submit witness lists that encompass all of the above-named defendants because there is no reasonable likelihood that it will call all of them as trial witnesses. The early witness lists shall be filed in each of the three cases set for trial no later than March 1, 2017. The parties in the above-captioned cases shall thereafter meet and confer and may submit a stipulation by March 15, 2017, as to the order in which probation referrals should be made and suggested dates for sentencing hearings. In the absence of a stipulation, the court will commence referring the above-named defendants for presentence investigations on a rolling basis starting with the oldest case and the sentencing dates will be determined by the amount of time needed by the probation department to conduct the investigations. The court will not wait until the conclusion of the three trials to commence this process, nor will the court wait to sentence the above-named defendants until after the sentencing of the defendants going to trial.

IT IS SO ORDERED.
